DEBORAH "DEBBY" KEARNEY ('81)

ALUMNI MAGAZINE & ANNUAL REPORT | 2020

Unprecedented Times

The 2019-2020 academic year started here at FSU Law with much promise, but recent months have been some of the most trying in our nation's history. As this magazine goes to print, the law school is immersed in efforts to keep our community members as safe as possible through the COVID-19 pandemic; to plan for our return to hybrid fall classes; and to engage in hard conversations and promising collaborations in order to determine the best path forward in the aftermath of the horrific killings of George Floyd, Ahmaud Arbery and Breonna Taylor, among many others.

As the article on COVID-19 in this magazine details, the law school has been operating mostly remotely since March. I have been heartened by the strength, ingenuity and resilience of our faculty, students and administrative team in the wake of the pandemic. Learning and mentoring continued strong through the end of the spring semester, with many faculty members reporting that the quality of final exams they evaluated this spring was stronger than ever. We have also found unique and special ways to celebrate students' accomplishments, to work with clinic clients, to identify valuable job opportunities for students and recent graduates, to provide virtual support to the graduates who are preparing for bar exams, and to remain connected to and supportive of one another.

Although Zoom classes have been more successful than we could have ever imagined, our surveys of students and professors indicate that a majority of community members want to be on campus in the fall. Our administrative team is currently working tirelessly to ensure our facilities can remain clean, regularly sanitized and safe, with occupants focused on social distancing, face coverings and enhanced personal hygiene efforts. Due to social distancing requirements and other CDC recommendations, many of our fall courses must nevertheless meet remotely. Additionally, any student who wants to take classes exclusively online in the fall due to health and safety concerns will have the option to do so. Our top priority remains the health and safety of our faculty, staff and students.

More recently, we have been working as a community to process the oppression and injustice against our Black neighbors, to promote desperately needed social change, and to further advance diversity, inclusion, and equity at the College of Law. As I mentioned in an issue of our FSU Law

I am thankful for each member of the FSU Law community who has contacted me, whether to offer words of encouragement and support for our students or to offer suggestions on how we can work toward positive change at the law school, in our local community and nationally. We must all work together to successfully weather the pandemic and to prevent oppression, injustice and racism.

Focus newsletter, which more broadly detailed my reaction to recent events and the law school's commitment to change, we are also motivated to find a way to use our legal skills to advocate for reform. In June, we held a panel discussion on police brutality and reform, featuring a special appearance by prominent civil rights attorney and alumnus Ben Crump ('95), who is representing the families of Ahmaud Arbery, Breonna Taylor and George Floyd. This panel was the first in a series of educational panels planned to discuss issues of systemic racism present in the criminal justice system. I am especially grateful to the students who are working with us to ensure that future panels most effectively address the legal issues that currently capture their passions.

Throughout these trying times, I have received many messages of support and concern from alumni. I am thankful for each member of the FSU Law community who has contacted me, whether to offer words of encouragement and support for our students or to offer suggestions on how we can work toward positive change at the law school, in our local community and nationally. We must all work together to successfully weather the pandemic and to prevent oppression, injustice and racism. Thank you for standing with us. In the meantime, please stay safe and be strong!

Deborah “Debby” Kearney: Destined for Public Service

By Christi N. Morgan

Deborah “Debby” Kearney (’81) devoted her entire legal career to public service. Before she retired from Citizens Property Insurance Company in January 2015, she had served as general counsel in all three branches of state government. She served both Democrat and Republican leaders at numerous state agencies, the Governor’s Office, the Florida House and Senate, and the Florida Supreme Court. Kearney began her legal career as a staff attorney for the Florida House Judiciary Committee—a job for which she was recruited—and she created a reputation for herself such that former colleagues and managers recruited her over and over again throughout her entire career. Highlights of her illustrious 35-years of service include serving as general counsel of the Florida Department of State during the 2000 presidential election—where she tirelessly worked on more than 40 emergency cases related to the election—and as general counsel for the 1998 Florida Constitution Revision Commission.

“I’m proud of all my jobs, but the one that was most special to me was as general counsel of the Constitution Revision Commission—it was a once-in-a-lifetime thing,” said Kearney. “It took so much of the work I had done in the Governor’s Office—which was a lot because I was there for seven-and-a-half years, so I had seen a lot about almost every area of the law—so that when I got to the Constitution Revision Commission, there was hardly a part of the Constitution I didn’t have some working knowledge of. I had a familiarity with a broad scope of our Constitution that I don’t think very many people get to have.”

Despite serving in high-ranking positions and reporting to elected officials, Kearney never allowed politics to motivate her work. “From the beginning, I think it was my first boss who said, ‘Don’t get involved in the politics; that is the fastest way to the dusty road.’ I really took that to heart.” Kearney felt not only was it her responsibility as a lawyer, but it was also her personal desire, to always produce the best work she could for every client.

“I always tried to give my best legal advice, no matter who my client was—Democrats, Republicans, non-partisan, whatever—nobody ever asked me to do anything untoward or overly political. I just did my legal work as best I could.

My key was to work smart, work hard and treat everyone with dignity.”

Although she spent more than three decades working in state government, when she started law school and even early in her career, Kearney thought she would eventually enter private practice as a property lawyer. Satisfaction and a growing interest in her government work changed her plans. Kearney found gratification in doing the right things in her public service jobs. “And the positions seemed to just open up one right after another,” Kearney said. “I never really thought about not having a job or doing something different. It seems like I was destined to do all those things. And they all were very rewarding.”

Kearney is especially proud of the many different areas of state government and law she was able to learn about during her career, and that she was able to use that knowledge to serve others. The importance of service was ingrained in Kearney when she was a high school student in Paoli, Pennsylvania. She recalls her civics teacher as leaving a lasting impression about how important it is to stand up for justice and to stand up for those who cannot stand up for themselves.

Because Kearney attributes much of her success to mentors who provided good examples of professionalism, she devoted herself to mentoring younger attorneys after she gained experience and wisdom. “I always enjoyed working with students and I did it every chance I got. I wanted to set the same kind of good example that had been set for me.”

Now that she is enjoying retirement, Kearney remains busy and engaged in the community. She spent her early years as a retiree traveling extensively, including to Europe and a three-week drive across the country with her sister. She remains engaged with Florida State University, supporting the College of Law and School of Theatre in a variety of ways. A cultural arts enthusiast and a benefactor of Opening Nights and the School of Theatre, Kearney attends many theater performances locally, in New York City and in other U.S. cities known for their cultural offerings. In her spare time, the self-proclaimed “total movie buff” also enjoys going to the movies, gathering with her friends and researching stocks. “I started an investment club in 1995 that still exists,” Kearney said. “I really get into doing stock research and I spend a lot of time doing it.”

Kearney recently felt a longing to return to public service. She now serves on the board of directors of Survive & Thrive Advocacy Center, which provides services to victims of labor and sex trafficking, and was appointed in 2019 to the Census 2020 Complete Count Committee for Tallahassee/Leon County.

Especially since the national spread of COVID-19, Kearney spends much of her time at home with her husband, Jim Kearney, a retired State of Florida manager who Kearney describes as “the best manager of people I’ve ever seen.” The couple married in December 1982 and the following spring they bought the Tallahassee house in which they still reside. They own three tractors to maintain their 5-acre property, which includes a garden and more than 100 pecan and citrus trees planted by the Kearneys.

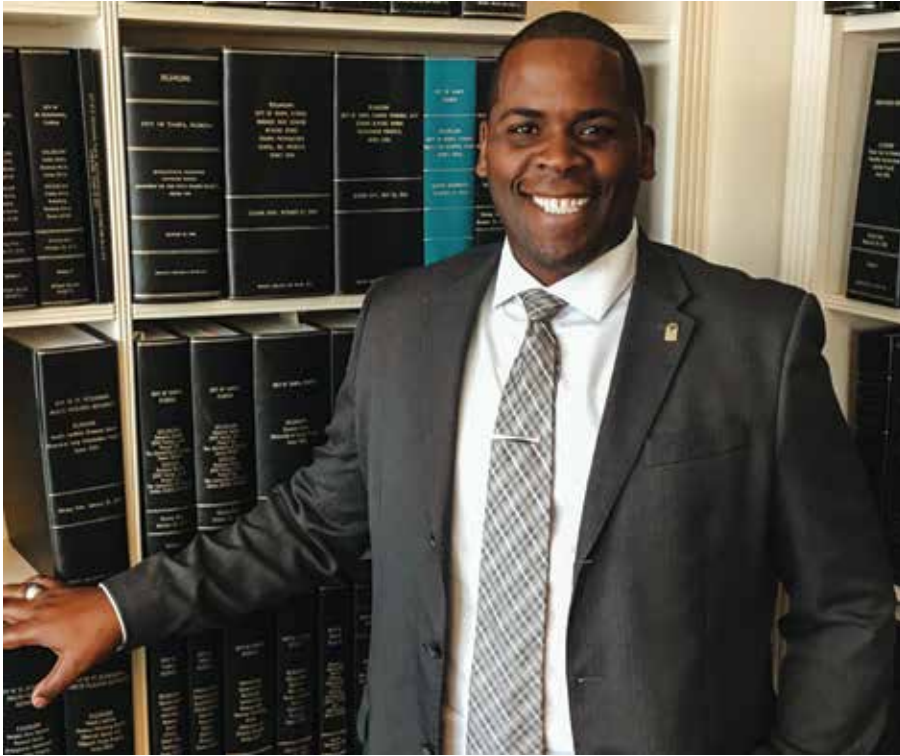

When Kearney married Jim, she also gained two “bonus daughters”—Jennifer and Jill. The Kearney family has grown to now include spouses for both daughters and three grandchildren. Kearney attributes much of her career success to her supportive family.

“One reason I was able to do my job was because I had a husband who supported me, who didn’t mind making his own dinner night after night. And that made a huge difference. And both Jennifer and Jill were so supportive of me. I couldn’t have asked for better kids if I had raised them myself. I’m about the luckiest person in the world for my family and my career.”

For someone whose motto is, “The harder you work, the luckier you get,” Kearney’s career and family successes are much-deserved. ■

Kareem J. Spratling: Improving Communities Through the Law and Service

By Christi N. Morgan

projects includes many in the areas of education, health care, seaports and general governmental projects such as water and sewer facilities and environmentally sensitive lands acquisition programs. In 2016, Spratling was honored for his work by The Bond Buyer magazine, which named him one of their inaugural group of 24 national “Rising Stars.”

A Class of 2006 graduate, Spratling relishes how much his work impacts people and makes a difference. “One of the fundamental prerequisites for the financings that I work on is that the projects being financed or refinanced must serve a public purpose,” Spratling said. “For example, we work on a federal program for Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs). We’re able to help HBCUs access capital to finance generational projects like new medical facilities that would not have otherwise been built. I have a soft spot for the projects that directly affect young people, like educational facilities or children’s hospitals. Often, we’re invited to visit a facility when it is complete and it’s just a magical thing to see that there was a need and you helped fill that need. It’s also an amazing feeling to see major improvements to something like a seaport or an expressway come to fruition. Thinking about the economic impact of those projects gives me a great deal of pride.”

As a collaborative, optimistic person, Spratling also enjoys the common purpose that typically accompanies his transactions. “Whether I’m represent-

As a 2L wanting to enroll in courses that would prepare him for the bar exam, Kareem J. Spratling took State Constitutional Law with Randy Hanna ('84) at FSU Law. The adjunct professor and former managing partner of Bryant Miller Olive (BMO), who now serves as dean of FSU Panama City, encouraged Spratling to clerk at BMO the summer before his 3L year. Now, 15 years later, Spratling is a shareholder at the firm in Tampa, where he concentrates his law practice in the area of public finance.

“I tell kids that I write IOUs, but it’s not quite that simple,” joked Spratling about how he helps clients obtain funding for their public projects through transactional work and negotiating deals. “Governments and non-profits, for the most part, have the ability to benefit from tax-exempt bonds. They can borrow money to finance or refinance the construction of new buildings or new infrastructure, like roads or bridges, or new hospitals or new schools at a federally subsidized interest rate. So that’s mainly what I do in the public finance area, and then I have the pleasure of serving as outside general counsel to a number of clients. In that role, I use my expertise in corporate governance and do a lot of handoffs to my colleagues who are specialists in other relevant practice areas.”

Spratling’s extensive list of financing

ing the lender or the borrower or a governmental entity that's issuing the bonds, everyone wants the transaction to close and you're all pulling in the same direction," said Spratling. "The underlying public purpose of the project is ever-present."

As of January 2020, Spratling is also a member of BMO's board of directors, and he leads a public finance team that practices nationwide and is based in the firm's Tampa, Washington, D.C. and Pensacola offices. He enjoys helping members of his team grow professionally and leads by example. Following an unwritten tenant of the firm—be nice to others—Spratling always encourages civility. "A requirement of the job is to negotiate a lot and point out where others have gotten something wrong, but you don't have to be a jerk in doing it," remarked Spratling.

Spratling primarily credits Hanna and BMO's current managing shareholder, Grace Dunlap, with showing him how to "be a smart and very prepared lawyer in a nice way."

In addition to his work on behalf of clients, Spratling is very involved in the National Association of Bond Lawyers. He chaired the group's Diversity Committee for two years, working to elevate diversity and inclusion within his practice area. After serving as chair, he also created and for three years led a panel about diversity and implicit bias at the association's main academic workshop.

Locally, Spratling served on the board and executive committee of the Greater Tampa Chamber of Commerce (now the Tampa Bay Chamber of Commerce), at one point serving as perhaps its youngest general counsel. "We were able to make our mark on the community and some of the things we did are still things the Chamber is doing."

His commitment to leadership and civic engagement go back to Spratling's days as a student at Florida State. He served as president of FSU Law's Black Law Students Association and Student Bar Association (SBA) and was the first student to serve on the Alumni Association Board of Directors.

"Being a student who is working and also involved in various activities helps you manage time properly, and I still use those skills today," Spratling said. "Also, if you're an effective student leader, you learn a lot of important skills on leadership because leading students is like herding cats. The only reason they are going to do what you want them to do is because you've actually led them towards something that they believe in and they want to do it."

In addition to shaping Spratling's professional career, serving as SBA president also profoundly impacted his personal life. Spratling first met his wife, Tammy, at an American Bar Association conference. He was there representing FSU's SBA and Tammy was in attendance as president of Stetson's SBA.

"When we tell the story about meeting at the ABA conference in Chicago, Tammy and I like to call ourselves law school nerds," joked Spratling. "We like travel, we love riding our bikes, we love experiencing new things and we really enjoy giving back to the world. We're close with my classmates Jason and Jennifer Watson ('06) and we've twice coordinated European travel with them, once to Oktoberfest in Munich and once for New Year's in Paris. Also, we don't have kids (other than a number of godchildren), so we try to be philanthropic as much as possible."

Tammy is executive director of Community Tampa Bay and president of Gasparilla International Film Festival, so the couple is very involved in Tampa-area civic and cultural events. They were also scheduled to host a law school reception at their home in April, which had to be canceled in light of COVID-19. A long-time supporter of FSU Law, Spratling currently serves on the law school's Board of Directors.

Spratling credits his grandparents, parents and Tammy with encouraging him throughout his life. "My grandparents poured so much energy and positivity into me that I think they willed me into some of the success that I have had," said Spratling. "Then my parents continued to nurture that and, finally, Tammy and I are constantly pushing each other to do the next thing and to be better people. We want to be excellent in everything we do, whether it be at our work or to each other in our marriage or through our giving back to our community." ■

Bruce and Wendy Wiener: All Roads Lead to Giving Back

By Beth N. Pannell

in politics, government or elected office. During law school, he was a legislative intern and worked for a committee that focused on local bills and growth management laws. Bruce said it was an exciting time, particularly during session, and he learned a lot about land use and the legislative process. Through a clerkship that followed, Bruce stayed connected to growth management and land use.

Professor Lawrence Krieger helped Bruce create an externship at 1000 Friends of Florida, which differed from the work he had been doing. 1000 Friends of Florida is a leading public interest growth advocacy organization. “I thought it would be good, from a political perspective, to learn about the legislative process, and the public interest side and the private sector side in order to gain a working knowledge of the competing growth management interests,” said Bruce.

After his externship experience, Bruce clerked for the firm at which he would spend the next 22 years. He turned his focus away from politics and began work exclusively in real estate and land use with lawyers well known in the fields, Charles Gardner (’74), Mike Bist and Jim Shelfer, who not only educated him on the practice of law, but also instilled the value of mentorship. A year or so out of law school, Bruce had the opportunity to represent the developer of a local apartment community. The work involved land use issues, environmental

What happens when a meandering road and a straight line cross paths in the library during 1L year of law school? For Wendy and Bruce Wiener, both Class of 1993, their library meeting during a legal writing research project—when they needed the same casebook—sparked a connection ultimately leading to their wedding during winter break of their 3L year. Nearly 30 years later, the Wieners, still in Tallahassee, are connected leaders in their community—mentoring young lawyers and setting examples for successful law careers.

Wendy’s road to lawyering was winding. She started undergrad at the University of South Florida as a voice major and bounced through six majors before graduating with a broadcast journalism degree. Realizing what she needed was a profession, she took the LSAT on a whim and decided to go to law school. Her dad had always wanted her to be a real estate lawyer. (Instead, her father got his wish through his son-in-law.) When Wendy entered law school in 1990, the nation had just celebrated the 20th anniversary of Earth Day, and Wendy, inspired by the mood of the day and focused on the environment, thought she would specialize in environmental law.

Bruce, on the other hand, was on a straight path directly in line with his goal. “I really always planned to go to law school,” he said. At Leon High School in Tallahassee, Bruce participated in student government. After attending undergrad as a political science major at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Bruce’s goal was to return to Tallahassee and practice law. Although he applied to several law schools, everything led him back to Tallahassee and FSU. “I started thinking about the opportunities here, the Capitol, the legislature and state government, and it made more and more sense,” he said.

Bruce initially planned for a career issues, litigation and transactions. The project solidified his desire to be part of a real estate transactional and development team.

A significant event in Bruce's career occurred in 2000, when he and a partner interviewed in Jacksonville with The St. Joe Company, then the largest landowner in Florida. The company was looking for transactional lawyers in the Tallahassee area as it was building a land division to market and sell its acreage and other divisions to develop, market and sell residential and commercial properties. Soon, St. Joe asked Bruce to work on a transaction and the work kept coming. "For many years, my team helped them close transactions throughout North Florida. The experience was one of the most transformative I've ever been through," said Bruce. "The work we did for the client solidified the reputation of my team to deliver quality real estate work. It gave us opportunities to deal with significant clients and significant matters. I look back with awe."

Now managing partner at Nelson Mullins' Tallahassee office, Bruce's practice continues to focus on transactional real estate law, commercial lending and land use. He represents buyers and sellers in the purchase and sale of commercial, office, multifamily, student housing, acreage and timberland property. His practice also includes representing lenders in all facets of commercial mortgage lending. In the spirit of his early career, Bruce provides mentorship to young lawyers and is particularly proud of the many accomplishments of his former and current associates.

After her first year of law school, Wendy began as a clerk at Mang, Rett and Collette. Doug Mang, managing partner and an owner of the firm, was a regulatory insurance lawyer. Some of the insurance interests he represented were those that sold insurance to fund preneed funeral agreements. Wendy continued working with him after graduation and over time, made connections and developed relationships in the deathcare industry. "For the last 15 years, all I've done is represent deathcare," she said. "I represent funeral homes, cemeteries, their owners, their operators, the individuals that are licensed there, as well as a handful of the financial institutions that hold the trust funds and most of the insurance companies that are in the space. I am also general counsel for the largest recordkeeper for deathcare trusts in the industry, called Funeral Services, Inc."

In 2009, Wendy left the boutique firm setting and joined Bruce at Gardner, Bist, Wiener, Wadsworth & Bowden, bringing her deathcare clients along with her. They practiced together there until 2015 when they transitioned to Broad and Cassel, now known as Nelson Mullins. At the end of 2019, Wendy separated from Nelson Mullins and on January 1, 2020, she opened her own practice, WRW Legal, again with her clients in tow. Having reestablished a boutique practice, Wendy continues to work closely with the lawyers at Nelson Mullins who support her deathcare clients. Bruce's team regularly handles the real estate transactions for her clients.

Bruce commented on Wendy's career trajectory, "I often read articles and participate in discussions regarding how to create more diversity in the practice of law. In particular, women with clients loyal to them that can be relocated from one firm to another are sought after. I believe Wendy's practice is an example of how it can be done."

Wendy explained further, "There are not as many women lawyers who have books of business of their own as would be ideal. Often it seems that women come out of law school and they get the great job and the men get the great job and then as soon as the women pull back from the workforce, even a little bit, then it's the men that go to the meetings, and the men that meet the clients, and the men that make the relationships. So, by the time the women come back to the workforce in a more complete way, then a lot of that relationship building has been done and so now the women are doing the work for the clients that their male colleagues have brought into the firm."

Wendy said she was fortunate because her first boss, and later partner, taught her how to get a client and keep that client, even during the time she was having children and raising them. With her own practice and having developed her own book of clients, when Wendy got busy enough to need an associate, she wanted to pay it forward. "I contacted the law school and said, 'I am looking for a woman candidate to be me later. I want to find somebody that I can bring on as a law clerk and can train and can foster and grow and let her engage with clients from the get-go and develop and learn how to do what I did and eventually take over for me.'" The young woman she hired as a second-year law clerk is now a first-year associate with Wendy at her new practice.

Abb Payne: Accomplished Leader and Businessman

By Christi N. Morgan

After moving to Tallahassee from his home state of Mississippi for law school, Wilford A. “Abb” Payne, III thought he might never leave the Sunshine State. Even upon deciding to join his father’s small homecare business after graduating, Payne chose to work in the Fort Lauderdale branch instead of one of three Mississippi locations. But after Payne successfully expanded Camellia Healthcare’s Fort Lauderdale operations into Palm Beach and became increasingly more involved in operations in Mississippi, his return home was inevitable.

“I’d live a month in Fort Lauderdale and a month in Mississippi and then we started our hospice division and started making acquisitions. Then we sold our Fort Lauderdale branch after we had grown it and that was the money we used to make more acquisitions,” recalled Payne. “So I took over this four-location homecare business and over the next 15 years took it from a single homecare division to three primary divisions—homecare, hospice and private duty—and from four locations to about 40 locations across the South.”

As an undergraduate at the University of Mississippi, Payne was a finance major and took every math course available. At Florida State, he earned an M.B.A. while earning his J.D., so his educational background was ideal for leading a business. The Class of 2001 alumnus attributes his schooling and youth to his initial success in growing Camellia. “I was young and didn’t know any different; I just assumed that if you ran a business, you were supposed to grow the business,” said Payne.

After his first acquisition as Camellia’s CEO—a homecare branch in Central Mississippi—Payne started the hospice division. “We were referring a lot of patients to other hospices, so I learned a lot about how great of a service hospices provide and it made sense for us to provide that care continuum to our own patients. We basically started our first hospice next door to our flagship homecare office in South Mississippi and we followed every homecare branch we had with a hospice branch. We used the money we made in our homecare businesses to start our hospice branches. Every dollar we made went back into the business to keep growing it.”

Because Camellia was privately held, they were able to buy distressed businesses and then Payne and his team worked to turn them into successful ventures. Payne credits many of their opportunities to being a family-owned business that had a reputation for taking care of its employees. Businesses were willing to be acquired by Camellia because they trusted that their employees would be welcomed and empowered.

“Camellia was really just a lot of small, family businesses that we merged together,” Payne said. While some of the previous owners retired, several of them remained teammates of Camellia after being acquired. “We sought out smaller businesses that were in our same situation and allowed them to monetize their hard work and then gave them an avenue where they could continue to work and, more importantly, all of their good people could continue to grow with Camellia.”

In May 2018, after 15 acquisitions and 10 start-ups, Payne sold Camellia to Encompass Health—the nation’s fourth largest provider of post-acute healthcare services.

“We never really set out to sell,” said Payne, who had previously sold two smaller businesses to other publicly-traded companies. “Most of the mom-and-pops, we or someone else had bought. To continue to grow would have taken a ton of debt. It was a risk I wasn’t willing to take.”

Since then, Payne has not slowed down. As CEO of Payne Companies, he has been investing in and advising new businesses. One of Payne’s first ventures was InfusionPlus, which has been named the nation’s ninth fastest growing healthcare company and the best small business at which to work in Mississippi. He also owns the largest privately owned homecare business in Tennessee, allowing Payne to capitalize on all of his experience at Camellia.

Payne takes great pride in creating business environments where people want to work. He believes one of the keys to his success in growing Camellia was the relationships he built. “Most of my businesses are people businesses. Camellia won ‘best place to work’ in all of our locations for something like 12 years in a row,” said Payne, who remains very close with all of the owners whose businesses he bought.

Payne Companies also oversees a dozen “Opportunity Zone” investments, owns boutique resorts and hotels throughout the U.S., and is constantly working on new projects. Payne is especially excited about two current venture capital investments: Homevalet.co and Goodjob.io.

Through the soon-to-“go-live” Homevalet app, subscribers can utilize lockable boxes at their houses, apartment buildings and high-rises to ensure deliveries are secured. Boxes can be temperature controlled for food and grocery deliveries and are accessible by unique codes provided to homeowners and delivery personnel. Homevalet is poised to launch later this year, and has become extremely relevant in the current pandemic, especially because boxes allow for contact-less, UVC-light-disinfected home delivery of groceries and other products purchased online.

Goodjob is an employee recruitment tool that Payne says will revolutionize the way employers and employees find one another. The website matches people and companies based on artificial intelligence analytics and eliminates large, industry-standard “finder’s fees” that recruiters typically earn.

Throughout his many successes, Payne has been supported by his wife, Jennifer, whom he met when his best friend’s mother set them up on a blind date. The Paynes have been married since 2007 and have three children, a 9-year-old son Ford, 6-year-old daughter Arden and 2-year-old son Duke. As a father of three, Payne’s life revolves around his family.

“We’ve got a trampoline and we ride bikes,” said Payne. “I’m really fortunate to have the flexibility to be with my kids when they need me to be. I’m my son’s Cub Scout leader and I was a t-ball coach.” The day Payne signed the deal to sell Camellia, he spent the evening “celebrating” behind second base at his son’s t-ball game. The Paynes also enjoy visiting the Florida panhandle beaches and attending football games in the fall.

In addition to his personal and professional pursuits, Payne is very involved in many Southeastern U.S. business communities where Payne Companies businesses operate, is a past state chairman of the Mississippi Young President’s Organization, and remains engaged with both of his alma maters. He serves on the boards of the University of Mississippi Foundation and the University of Mississippi Alumni Association, and is a member of FSU Law’s Board of Visitors.

“I’m honored to be affiliated with Florida State,” said Payne. “I am very happy that I went to Florida State for a lot of reasons and loved every minute of my time around the College of Law and Tallahassee.” Although he returned to Mississippi, Payne remains connected to Florida through his engagement with the law school, his pride in his alma mater and regular family vacations to the Sunshine State. ■

Resilience and Creativity in the Wake of COVID-19

By Christi N. Morgan

After COVID-19 began spreading across the U.S. earlier this year, the university transitioned to remote classes for the last several weeks of the spring 2020 semester. At the law school, our first attempt with virtual learning in this new Zoom environment was our annual spring break course, Law & Risk Management, taught by alumnus Fred E. Karlinsky ('92). The course entailed 30-hours of synchronous online coursework, featuring almost 30 guest speakers over four days. Although the law school had less than a week to transition to a virtual format, the class was a success.

"Everything worked flawlessly and greatly exceeded my—and likely the students'—expectations," said Karlinsky.

To protect the health and safety of students, faculty, staff and visitors, all university events were canceled after spring break and visitors were asked to wait to come to campus. FSU also strongly encouraged remote working for employees who could perform their job duties off campus. Additionally, the Research Center transitioned to providing a full range of services virtually and electronically.

When classes resumed after spring break on March 23, the law school began offering daily enrichment sessions led by various law school departments to help keep students informed and connected. Spearheaded by the Office of Student Advancement, the virtual lunchtime sessions also served as a way to promote wellness and provide small doses of normalcy for students.

"It was very important to us to provide extra support to students while they were dealing with so many unknowns," said Nancy Benavides, associate dean for academic programs and student advancement. "We also wanted to offer programming that allowed students to take mental health breaks and to participate in familiar lunchtime sessions like they would on campus."

The law school also created a place on the website where students could easily access the latest COVID-19-related university updates and official messages from the law school. Additionally, Dean Erin O'Connor began hosting Zoom community meetings twice a week to share timely law school news and talk with students, professors and staff members about any challenges they were facing. Once-a-week community meetings continued after the spring semester concluded.

The FSU Law Admissions Office created new virtual programming for prospective students to take the place of their previously planned on-campus Preview Day events. In addition to a mock class, prospective students attended Zoom sessions on topics including the 1L experience, student life, business law, international law, criminal law, intellectual property law, career services and clinical opportunities. The Alumni Affairs and Development team also planned and implemented more than 10 new virtual alumni receptions.

"The initiative and resilience of the entire FSU Law community has been impressive," said Dean O'Connor. "With the help of staff members, especially the College of Law's technology team, the faculty navigated remote teaching in excellent fashion. Students encouraged one another and remained engaged while balancing new challenges with grace. FSU Law staff members found creative methods to support students, never missing a beat due to working from home."

Unable to hold commencement celebrations and end-of-the-year banquets, the FSU Law faculty gathered via Zoom to create a congratulatory video for the class of 2020. The law school also created an online graduation program to honor our newest alumni.

As the spring semester ended and the summer semester began, the Externships and Career Services teams worked overtime to assist students and recent graduates with job searches. Those searches became more complicated with the spread of COVID-19—in some cases, students who had previously secured summer employment had to search for new opportunities. In light of the challenges facing law students and new graduates, the law school developed ways to connect employers with FSU Law students and graduates, including a Hire FSU Law web page where alumni and other employers can search for potential employees by desired location and practice area.

“Our students have shown amazing creativity and determination in their quest for work experience and full-time jobs—they are networking with alumni, creating video introductions of themselves, diligently seeking out and following up on leads, and several of them secured self-initiated externships for the summer,” said FSU Law Assistant Dean for Career Services and Professional Development Debra Henley (’88). “We appreciate everyone who has sent us job leads, hired our students and counseled them during this trying time.”

Public Interest Law Center professors and students also found creative ways to assist clients and the community virtually during the pandemic. And FSU faculty members have served as experts and media sources for COVID-19-related reports and articles. Assistant Professor Michael Morley and Stearns Weaver Miller Professor Mary Ziegler have been in the news regularly for their expertise on election law and abortion, respectively. Additionally, Edward Ball Eminent Scholar Professor of International Law Frederick M. Abbott’s work on global health issues—including working with the World Health Organization—is directly related to the international pandemic.

Throughout everything, FSU Law alumni have provided a great deal of support and inspiration. From donating generously to students who were negatively impacted by COVID-19 to serving as bar prep mentors and sending new job opportunities, alumni have answered the call repeatedly when the FSU Law community needed assistance. “We are grateful to have some of the most supportive, engaged graduates in the country,” Dean O’Connor said.

As of the end of May, all summer classes are being taught online and FSU is planning for the fall semester. While we cannot know with certainty what the future holds, the FSU Law family remains strong and resilient. ■

Q&A with Professor Elissa Philip Gentry

At the beginning of the 2019-2020 academic year, FSU Law welcomed Elissa Philip Gentry as a new assistant professor. The following Q&A provides a glimpse into her area of expertise, why she joined FSU Law and her biggest influences.

What made you decide to become a law professor?

Being in legal academia means that I not only get to teach, but I get to continually learn as well. I find pushing the frontier of current knowledge and getting the chance to pass new research on to students particularly gratifying.

Please explain your area of expertise and why you chose to specialize in that area.

My research focuses on the intersection of law and economics and health law. I study consumers' and physicians' risk perceptions, particularly toward pharmaceutical products and medical devices, with an eye toward evaluating the need for regulation. I am also interested in the process by which physicians learn about, and incorporate into their medical practice, new risks associated with treatments.

Learning how to understand and deal with risk is a fundamental human issue, made much more salient in the context of health care. There are many known irrational reactions to incomplete risk information, and regulation is sometimes necessary to correct existing misperceptions. Working in this area allows me to shed light on a question that is ultimately very practical and policy relevant.

What's most exciting about your area of expertise?

The law and economics of health care grapples with a lot of real-life decisions we make daily: how to deal with medical uncertainty, how to balance health risks with the other needs in our life, how to forecast our future needs. The practicality of the subject matter means that I have the opportunity to suggest reforms that might have a concrete effect on quality of life, which is very exciting for me.

How do you bring your scholarship/research into the classroom?

I am an empiricist by training, so I enjoy supplementing discussions about a legal topic with current empirical evidence regarding the phenomenon. I think this not only gives students an idea of the practical importance of a topic but also of the validity of the assumptions underlying the law. Moreover, presenting the type of empirical evidence currently available highlights the remaining empirical questions that have yet to be answered (and, accordingly, the assumptions that are still untested).

Why did you want to join the FSU Law faculty?

Florida State University's College of Law is known for its excellence, not only in teaching but in scholarship, so I was very grateful to be affiliated with such quality scholars. Moreover, Dean O'Hara O'Connor was the director of graduate studies at Vanderbilt University when I was completing my J.D./Ph.D. there, so the chance to work under her direction was a big draw.

If you weren't teaching, what do you think you would be doing?

Ideally, solving crimes on a television show.

Who had the biggest influence on you? Why?

My parents brought our family to the United States when I was one year old. My father is a chemical engineer and my mom is a chemist, and they both instilled in their children a love of learning and intellectual curiosity. Without their sacrifices I would not be where I am today, and without their mentorship and care I would not be who I am today.

What do you like to do in your spare time?

I am partial to short-distance, slow-paced runs.

Can you tell us a little about your family?

My husband, Matthew Gentry, is a professor in the economics department at FSU. Prior to arriving at FSU, he was a tenured assistant professor at the London School of Economics, and I was completing a postdoctoral fellowship at the Institute for Advanced Study in Toulouse (IAST) in France. Both of our families live here in the South, so we are excited to be close to home.

Are you working on any projects related to COVID-19?

I am working on a preliminary project with W. Kip Viscusi (Distinguished Professor at Vanderbilt University) regarding occupational risk preferences of healthcare workers. The specific risk we are studying is exposure to a COVID-type infection. This project will shed light on wage compensating differentials demanded for this type of occupational risk. Moreover, the project will examine how workers respond to employer-offered protection/insurance schemes meant to reduce such risk. This is an extension of our work on occupational risk regulation and value of statistical life/injury. We are currently crafting the survey and intend to run it on Amazon Mechanical Turk participants working in healthcare.

Can you tell readers about your experience teaching remotely during the spring semester?

It has definitely been an adjustment, but it has been encouraging to see the willingness of both students and faculty to take this journey together.

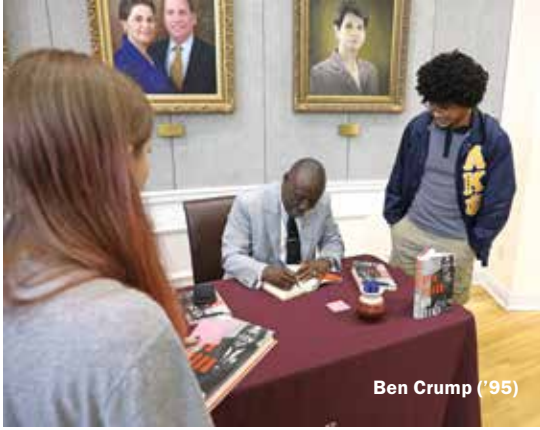

How would you describe FSU Law students?

FSU Law students are extremely bright and motivated. I have been so impressed by the insightful questions they ask and the intellectual curiosity they bring to the classroom. They know what they want to accomplish and they proactively take steps to actualize their goals.

What has surprised you most about FSU Law so far?

I have been impressed by the strong sense of community within the school. I appreciate that students seem to look out for each other and are proud of the culture of respect and empathy they have cultivated. Especially in today's world, I think this is a mark of character that transcends academics and produces responsible members of society. ■

FSU BLSA Wins Mock Trial Competition

In February 2020, FSU Law's Black Law Students Association (BLSA) won first place in the Constance Baker Motley Mock Trial Competition at the Southern Region of the Black Law Students Association's regional convention in Charleston, South Carolina. Florida State competed in five rounds and was undefeated throughout the mock trial competition. A total of nine law school teams competed, including teams from University of Alabama, University of Florida and University of North Carolina. Winning team members were second-year student Anthony Smith, and first-year students Destinee Campbell, Christopher Ramirez, Shaina Ruth, and alternate Zuriel Denmark. They were coached by Florida State law alumni Louis Jean-Baptiste ('16), who practices at the Law Office of Stephen G. Webster, LLC in Tallahassee, and Matthew C. Williams ('13), who practices at Akbar Law Firm, P.A. in Tallahassee. The team was scheduled to compete in the related national competition in March, but the event was cancelled due to the pandemic.

FSU Law Students Serve as Gubernatorial Fellows

Six of the 13 members of the 2019-2020 Florida Gubernatorial Fellows class were students at FSU Law. Historically, FSU Law students have held substantially more fellowships than students from any other law school. For 2019-2020, FSU Law students held twice as many fellowships as students from all other law schools combined. Fellows receive advanced on-the-job training and a glimpse into the inner workings of government, as they fulfill roles of critical responsibility, interact closely with the state's top leaders, and employ their skills and abilities in a rewarding environment.

The Wieners agreed that time management is the biggest challenge in their careers. Even as empty nesters, while friends are starting new hobbies or getting projects done, the Wieners have let work fill in that available time. "Now, any spare time is consumed by visiting our kids who are far flung," said Wendy. The Wieners have two daughters, Leah, 24, a musical theatre graduate who lives in New York City, and Samantha, 21, who attends Emerson College in Boston. She is set to graduate this December. The Wieners are also community minded. Wendy has served as a member of the board of the Epilepsy Association of the Big Bend, president of Raising a Healthy Child, president of the Temple Israel Board of Trustees, chair of the Jewish Food and Cultural Festival, and co-chair for the Tallahassee Shakespeare Festival. Bruce serves on the Temple Israel Board of Trustees, The Governors Club Executive Committee, and has been a board member of Young Actors Theatre and the City of Tallahassee Chamber of Commerce, among others.

In addition, the Wieners are both members of the FSU Law Board of Visitors. Through the years, Wendy has coached FSU Law Moot Court teams and Bruce has been a guest lecturer, but they wanted to do more. In 2010, they established the Bruce and Wendy Wiener Endowed Scholarship, another way of giving back to the school to which they attribute so much of their success. Wendy would never have envisioned a career practicing regulatory deathcare law and Bruce's career path may have branched slightly from its original course, but both are thankful for the opportunities they have had and feel driven to pay it back by helping FSU Law and young lawyers find their unique roads to success. "FSU Law is the foundation for our careers and our mentorship. We want to give the law school as much support as we are able." ■

Students Successfully Advocate for Florida School Requirement

During the fall 2019 semester, students participating in the FSU Human Trafficking Exploitation Law Project advocated for a proposed Florida Department of Education (DOE) rule that requires all school districts in Florida to teach human trafficking prevention from elementary school through high school. Law students researched the state laws of California, Virginia and North Carolina pertaining to implementing preventative measures in schools and drafted comments to the DOE rule to make it a robust, meaningful requirement for Florida school districts. FSU Law students participating in the project were 2L Mylena Chin-See, 3L Daniela Donoso and 2L Marissa Vairo.

In September 2019, the students presented in favor of their comments in person at a State Board of Education meeting in Jacksonville, where the board adopted their comments verbatim and passed the rule. The new rule went into effect on November 6.

Alumni Board Establishes Regional Alumni Chapters

The FSU Law Alumni Association Board of Directors recently began establishing regional alumni chapters that allow alumni to network, visit and help one another on a localized level. To date, there are formalized chapters for Atlanta, Florida's First Coast, Florida's Space Coast, Fort Lauderdale, Miami, New York City, Orlando, Palm Beach, Southwest Florida, Tallahassee and Tampa. Several chapters have already connected, and planning is underway for future regional events. All alumni are encouraged to get involved. Thank you to the chapter representatives and all additional alumni who are helping with the chapters. Legislative Intern Class Includes Nine FSU Law Students

Nine FSU Law students served in the 2019-20 class of 12 legislative interns. The Florida House of Representatives Legislative Intern Program is an excellent opportunity for students who are interested in the legislative process to obtain first-hand knowledge of the process and to participate in the work of the legislative branch of state government. Interns are assigned to various House committees, subcommittees and leadership offices. Their assignments include research, bill drafting and analysis, oversight activities and other tasks relating to policy or fiscal areas. The students served from October 2019 until March 2020.

Bob Rice Presents Inaugural Amelia Rea Maguire Business Law Lecture

On February 24, we hosted alumnus Bob Rice ('79) as the featured speaker during our Inaugural Amelia Rea Maguire Business Law Lecture. Rice gave an inspiring talk, "Defining Your Value in the Digital Age," to a packed room of alumni, students and friends.

Rice spoke about how the industrialized world has been conquered by the digital world of artificial intelligence and machine learning. He said that the key to being competitive in this world of increased digitization is being good at what the computers and over-specialized individuals are not. "We're never going to be able to out-munch the computers," Rice said when discussing the ability of machines to process data. "But what we can do is zoom out and see the connections and abstract from one body of thinking and results to another body of thinking and results, and see how the trends collide."

He suggested attendees become knowledgeable about multiple areas, such as private equity, investment management, markets, trends and globalization, so they can see how they overlap and make the connections other people do not see. Rice said individuals who add value that way and never stop learning and pushing will have amazing careers.

The lecture ended with an audience Q&A moderated by Jeffrey H. Kahn, the FSU Harry M. Walborsky professor and associate dean for business law programs. The event was co-sponsored by the FSU College of Business and made possible by the generous support of alumna Amelia (Mel) Rea Maguire ('87).

DEAN'S ANNUAL FUNDRAISING REPORT

Dear Alumni and Friends:

This was a year of great success for the law school. The reputation of our outstanding students, faculty and alumni continues to blossom. Most importantly, we consistently have one of the best job placement rates in Florida and the region.

Private fundraising makes a critical difference at the law school, helping us to attract and to support the best students and faculty.

TOTAL GIFTS AND PLEDGES

Putting annual giving and larger gifts together, we raised a cash total of $1,113,744, and new pledges in the amount of $997,366, for a grand total of $2,111,110.

ANNUAL GIVING FROM ALUMNI

This past year, 26.22% of our alumni made cash gifts to the law school. Based on the latest American Bar Association data, this level of participation should keep us among the nation's top law schools in terms of alumni giving rate. This level of alumni contributions enriches the life of the school and sends a powerful signal about the enthusiasm our alumni have for the school.

GIVING FROM STUDENTS

During the 2018-2019 fiscal year, 88.27% of our students participated in the Student Give Back Campaign. Our student enthusiasm and generosity bodes well for the future. They are blazing the trail for us all!

LARGER GIFTS

This past year, cash payments received totaled $110,134 towards $1,107,500 of Larger Gift pledges. The "Cash Gifts By Level" portion of this report includes only cash payments made during the fiscal year, even if they were but a portion of a larger gift. Under the heading of "Recent Larger Gifts," we outline the larger gift commitments that we received in the 2018-2019 fiscal year.

We are deeply grateful to everyone who has contributed to our many successes. We shall continue to do our best to pay great dividends on the dollars you have invested in our school.

Sincerely,

Erin O'Hara O'Connor, Dean

ENDOWED GIFT OPPORTUNITIES

ENDOWED SCHOLARSHIPS

Our single greatest need from private giving is endowed scholarships. To continue to serve our mission of providing access to all, including those from families of modest means, we will need significantly more scholarships. Scholarships are awarded according to the intent of the donor and may be based on merit, need or other factors. The endowed scholarship would be named after you or your designee.

Minimum gift needed to create an endowed scholarship: $25,000 (may be paid over time)

Nabeha Shaer, class of 2021, is the recipient of the Calvin Patterson Civil Rights Endowed Scholarship.

ENDOWED PROFESSORSHIPS AND CHAIRS

According to a 2018 study of law faculty scholarly impact, our faculty is #1 in Florida and #29 nationally. Our faculty members are being recruited by some of the nation's most prominent law schools. Endowed professorships and chairs provide salary supplements based on merit. Faculty members are appointed for five-year terms, with renewal contingent on continued scholarly productivity. Professorships and chairs give us the merit money we need to retain our top faculty. The professorship or chair would be named after you or your designee.

Minimum gift needed to endow a professorship: $200,000 (may be paid over time)

Minimum gift needed to endow a chair: $1,000,000 (may be paid over time)

The Edward Ball Eminent Scholar Chair in International Law has been instrumental in keeping Frederick M. Abbott at Florida State. He is highly regarded for his work in international intellectual property rights and global economic issues.

ENDOWMENTS FOR EXCELLENCE

Endowments for excellence are used, at the discretion of the law school, for purposes such as student scholarships, faculty incentives, general discretionary dollars and funding for co-curricular activities including Law Review, Trial Team, and Moot Court. The endowment for excellence would be named after you or your designee.

Minimum gift needed to create an endowment for excellence: $25,000 (may be paid over time)

Courtney Cahill, the Donald Hinkle Professor, is a national expert on sexuality and the law. A professorship helped Florida State recruit Cahill to the College of Law.

ENDOWMENTS FOR PARTICULAR PROGRAMS

Private philanthropy has helped us take many of our existing programs to a new level of excellence. Our award-winning Moot Court and Trial Teams benefit from private contributions to supplement the dollars available to them for purposes such as traveling to regional and national competitions. Our Public Interest Law Center, which includes the Children's Advocacy Clinic, the Gender and Family Justice Clinic, and the Veterans Legal Clinic, relies on private contributions to help pay for some of the expenses involved in training students to provide effective legal services to the under-represented. An important goal of the law school is to raise substantial endowments to support special programs and co-curricular organizations. Some programs simply would not exist at the law school but for the generous support of our alumni.

Minimum gift needed to create an endowment to benefit a particular program: $25,000 (may be paid over time)

DONOR RECOGNITION

We are delighted to recognize scholarships, professorships and other targeted gifts by naming them in honor of the donor or the donor's designee. In addition, we are pleased to acknowledge inter vivos gifts of $200,000 or more with an oil portrait of the donor or the donor's designee that will be displayed in a prominent place at the law school. The Advocacy Center and the renovated spaces in the main classroom building give us many rooms to name to thank donors for gifts ranging from $25,000 to $5 million.
